

ABSTRACT

Data transmission from a network element to a network management system includes providing a response to be transmitted to the network management system with at least one pointer indicating the location where to find additional information, before the response is transmitted. When requested by the operator, the network management system opens the additional information from the location indicated by the pointer. Thus, the operator need not establish a separate session and search information.